Open Budget Index Highlights

The Czech Republic scores 64 percent out of a possible 100 percent on the Open Budget Index 2006. The Index evaluates the quantity of information provided to citizens in the seven key budget documents that all governments should make public during the course of the budget year. The Czech Republic's performance indicates that the government provides citizens with substantial information on the central government's budget and financial activities, but that there is some room for improvement.

The executive's budget proposal is one of the most important documents released during the budget year. The Czech Republic's proposal provides substantial information to the public, scoring 64 percent out of a possible 100 percent of the information needed to present the public with a comprehensive picture of the government's financial activity. This suggests that there is some room for improvement.

Governments should report to citizens regularly during the budget year on their spending, revenue collection and borrowing with in-year reports. Czech Republic provides substantial information in its in-year reports as well as a comprehensive mid-year review. The mid-year review provides the public with updates on what can be expected for the second half of the budget year. Year-end reports by the executive are released in a timely manner, but lack some details needed to facilitate comparisons between enacted levels and actual outcomes. While Czech Republic does make its audit report public, it does not provide any information on whether the audit report's recommendations are successfully implemented.

Citizens require both access to information, and opportunities during the budget's consideration to use that information, to ensure their informed participation in budget debates. Czech Republic's score on the Open Budget Index suggests that the public's access to information could be improved. The researchers also found that opportunities for citizen participation could be increased. For example, the legislature does hold public hearings on the budget – but there are only a very limited number of hearings in which the public can participate.
