

Russia

Open Budget Index 2006

Open Budget Index Highlights

Russia scores 47 percent out of a possible 100 percent on the Open Budget Index 2006. The Index evaluates the quantity of information provided to citizens in the seven key budget documents that all governments should make public during the course of the budget year. Russia's performance indicates that the government provides citizens with some information on the central government's budget and financial activities, but that there is much room for improvement.

Public Availability of Key Budget Documents
Budget Document	Availability
Pre-Budget Statement
Executive's Budget Proposal
Citizens' Budget
In-Year Reports
Mid-Year Review
Year-End Report
Auditor's Report
Available to the Public	Produced but for internal Use Only	Not Produced

The executive's budget proposal is one of the most important documents released during the budget year. Russia's proposal provides minimal information to the public, scoring 34 percent out of a possible 100 percent of the information needed to present the public with a comprehensive picture of the government's financial activity. This suggests that there is substantial room for improvement.

Governments should report to citizens regularly during the budget year on their spending, revenue collection and borrowing with in-year reports. Russia provides good information in its in-year reports, as well as a fairly comprehensive mid-year review. This document provides the public with updates on what can be expected for the second half of the budget year. Year-end reports by the executive are released in a timely manner, but more details are needed to facilitate comparisons between enacted levels and actual outcomes. While Russia does make its audit report public, it does not provide any information on whether the audit report's recommendations are successfully implemented.

Citizens require both access to information, and opportunities during the consideration of the budget to use that information, to ensure their informed participation in budget debates. Russia's score on the Open Budget Index suggests that the public's access to information could be improved. The researcher also found that opportunities for citizen participation are fair. For example, the legislature does hold public hearings on the budget – and there are a number of hearings in which the public can participate.

Research to complete the Open Budget Questionnaire was undertaken by:
Tatiana Vinogradova
St. Petersburg Humanities and Political Studies STRATEGY

7th Krasnoarmeyskaya 25/14
198005 St.Petersburg, Russia
Tel: (+7 812) 712 66 12, 316 48 22
E-mail: t9095115@yandex.ru
Website: www.strategy-spb.ru, www.strategy-spb.ru/en

The International Budget Project was established as part of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, a Washington, DC-based non-partisan non-profit research organization, in 1997 to support civil society organizations around the world interested in strengthening public budget processes, institutions and outcomes. For more information on the IBP and the Open Budget Initiative 2006, please visit www.openbudgetindex.org