There are also private (international) companies engaged in other mining activities. Apart from tax rates and royalties, the specific agreements that govern the state-multinational enterprise ventures are not made public. Although rates of taxes and royalties are public knowledge, fees for management contracts are not necessarily disclosed. Therefore, not all the terms and conditions relating to revenues contained in these agreements are made available to the public. It is possible for the public to request these, but we do not have precedents that could confirm whether indeed such information could be made public by the government. This may be even more difficult where the entities involved are fully private (i.e. not joint ventures between the state and private entities). The information that is in the public domain, or disclosed to the public, is accurate. It is doubtful whether the average members of the public would require that it should be more comprehensive than it is. Peer Reviewer One Comment: Peer Reviewer Two Comment:	b

Researcher Additional Comments:

The Botswana national development planning and budgeting processes are closely linked. The Ministry of Finance and Development Planning (MFDP) has overall responsibility for planning, budgeting and overall management of the economy. The MFDP has divisions responsible for economic affairs (planning and macroeconomic policy formulation) and budget administration (budgeting and fiscal policy). The ministry also works closely with the Bank of Botswana (central bank), with regard to monetary policy. The national development plan (NDP) covers six years, with a mid-term review (MTR). At the MTR, there is an assessment of progress and revision of projections and expenditure estimates. The first year of the NDP is linked to the annual budget. The MTR is done during year three and thus the following year (four) contains revised information and budget projections for years 4, 5 and 6, is also directly linked to the annual budget of that year.

However, there is always a "mid-term vision" in all the years, because even though there are no direct linkages of the NDP and the annual budget in years 2, 3, 5 and 6, annual budgeting closely follows the projections of the NDP, in which case the NDP acts as a guide for annual budgeting.

There is constant assessment and review that goes on every year, which links national planning and budgeting. The processes of planning and budgeting are interrelated. Project memoranda are the basis of project initiation. The memoranda are contracts detailing activities and resources allocation. Annual project review meetings are held every October at the MFDP, during which all ministries and departments assess the progress of implementation, leading to revision of projections and budget estimates. The MTR of the NDP is simply a cumulative summary of progress made by the middle point of NDP implementation, based on the preceding annual reviews. The mid-term review of the National Development Plan thus assesses the implementation progress of the entire range of planned activities that had resources allocated to them during each annual budget process. There are also the Accountant General's monthly expenditure reports and the scrutiny of accounts of expenditure by the Office of the Auditor General who reports to the Public Accounts Committee of Parliament.

There is, therefore, an elaborate system for budgeting, implementation, monitoring of expenditures and review of the budget. The system involves close coordination of the medium term (and annual) planning and budgeting processes and the annual and mid-term reviews (mentioned above) serve to identify and assess the outputs from implementation of approved policies and budgets (which are projected in the NDP). The annual budgeting process is thus part of the operation of the 6-year medium term plan and to annual "plans" that are synchronized into the annual budgets.

This planning and budgeting system has developed incrementally since independence, and is largely responsible for Botswana's prudent financial management. It establishes a connection between medium-term development planning and annual budgeting while establishing a continuous and constant system of monitoring and review that ensures adherence to the plans and budget, and accountability for the use of public resources. It is thus not necessary for Botswana to adopt the models of MTEF that have been forced on other countries by pressures from international financial institutions. However, the process is dominated by bureaucratic processes, with the legislature only involved through the estimates committee and the Public Accounts Committee's involvement. Notably, non-state actors are not involved in the process. It is, therefore, not fully transparent.
