The Executive's Budget Proposal
Estimates for the Budget Year and Beyond
1. Does the executive's budget or any supporting budget documentation present expenditures for the budget year that are classified by administrative unit (that is, by ministry, department, or agency)? <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. All expenditures are classified by administrative unit. b. Expenditures are classified by administrative unit, but some small units are not shown separately. c. Expenditures are classified by administrative unit, but a significant number of units are not shown separately. d. No expenditures classified by administrative unit are presented. e. Not applicable/other (please comment). Citation: Interviews with Saudi bankers and former senior Ministry of Finance functionary Comment: There is an annual press statement issued in December when the budget is officially enacted by the cabinet. This press statement is issued shortly before the fiscal year begins on January 1. The press statement is issued by the Ministry of Finance and published by major national newspapers. The statement indicates the aggregate levels of income and expenditure of the previous year and expected income and the sectoral breakdown of planned expenditure for the new budget year (education, health, municipalities, etc.). The sectoral figures are divided into current and capital expenditure. Usually, allocations for specific non-ministerial government organizations are also provided. The information is broadly helpful, but very generic. This is the only publicly available document on the Saudi budget. The purpose of Questions 1-55 in the questionnaire is to evaluate the information that governments make public in their executive's budget proposal and supporting documents during the time that the budget proposal is under consideration in the legislature -- prior to its enactment. This set of document is sometimes known as the annual consolidated budget presentation. However, there is no elected legislature in Saudi Arabia, and the appointed "Majlis Ash-Shura" does not have budgetary powers. (Its most daring act so far was to refuse a planned income tax on foreigners, which met great resistance in business circles who rely mostly on foreign workers). There have been some demands from the Majlis to be granted budgetary powers, but its mid-term prospects to receive them are rated as rather dim, especially as the current oil boom has obviated the need to impose any taxes that might be politically contentious. Some Majlis members reportedly also do not want to deal with budgetary issues as they are afraid of becoming privy to corruption in the process. As such, no executive's budget proposal and supporting documents is made available to the public prior to the budget's enactment. Questions 1-55 have been marked as "d" to reflect this practice. (With exception to a few questions that have only three possible response options. These questions have been marked as "b" to reflect the lack of publicly available information.) Peer Reviewer One Comment: Peer Reviewer Two Comment:	d

Comment:

Nothing is available beyond the general laws, bylaws and ministerial decrees that govern the taxation of various sectors (and the last type of document is often difficult to come by; they are usually collected by specialized accountancy firms). These do not contain information about the volume of specific income sources. See also comment to question 57.

Researcher's Response to this Question was "d."

Peer Reviewer One Comment: A more appropriate response to this question would be "c." Information on the tax base and tax rates, and on Zakat Base Items (Zakat is an Islamic form of tax) is available on:

<http://www.zakat.gov.sa/en/TaxLaw/TaxLawChapter3.shtml> and
<http://www.zakat.gov.sa/en/CommerceZakat/CommerceZakat2.shtml>

Peer Reviewer Two Comment: A more appropriate response to this question would be "c." Although not part of the budget, detailed information on tax rates and laws can be found on the Department of Zakat and Income Tax Website

(<http://www.zakat.gov.sa/en/TaxLaw/TaxLaw.shtml>). Tariff information is available on the Ministry of Finance's Saudi Customs Website (http://www.customs.gov.sa/CustomsNew/tariff/section_E.aspx). Because this information is not linked to revenue, and because there is no publicly available enacted budget, answer "c" is proposed.

Researcher's Comment: [No additional information provided]

IBP Comment: IBP editors chose answer 'c' to maintain the consistency of the assumptions used in selecting answers across the countries.

Comment:

The only information available is a breakdown of total revenues into oil and non-oil income, which is published inter alia by the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency in its annual report and in the statistics section of its website:

<http://www.sama.gov.sa/newreports/annual/en/section5/indexe.htm>. Much more detailed income information is contained in the government's annual closing accounts, but these are not public and are not even shared widely within the government.

Researcher's Response to this Question was "d."

Peer Reviewer One Comment:

Peer Reviewer Two Comment: A more appropriate response to this question would be "b." Detailed information on both tax and zakat (religious tax) burden is available on the Department of Zakat and Income Tax Website

(<http://www.zakat.gov.sa/en/TaxLaw/TaxLaw.shtml> for taxes, and <http://www.zakat.gov.sa/en/CommerceZakat/commercezakat1.shtml> for zakat).

Because no quantitative estimates are provided, answer "b" has been selected.

Interviews with senior Saudi bankers and former senior Ministry of Finance functionary.

Comment:

There is an annual press statement issued in December when the budget is officially enacted by the cabinet. It is issued by the Ministry of Finance and published by major national newspapers. The statement indicates the aggregate levels of income and expenditure of the previous years and expected income and the sectoral breakdown of planned expenditure for the new budget year (education, health, municipalities etc.). The sectoral figures are divided into current and capital expenditure. Usually, allocations for specific non-ministerial government organizations are also provided. The information is broadly helpful, but very generic. This is the only publicly available document on Saudi budgets. Here is a sample:

<http://www.mofa.gov.sa/Detail.asp?InSectionID=3982&InNewsItemID=72894>

<http://mof.gov.sa/en/docs/news/statement2008en.pdf>

Peer Reviewer One Comment:

Peer Reviewer Two Comment: The answer seems to lie somewhere between "b" and "c." The Guide to the Open Budget Questionnaire lacks clear guidelines to distinguish between "somewhat informative" and "not very informative." As the only publicly available budget document, the summary is not very informative. The Arabic version of the Budget Summary is slightly more detailed than the English version (<http://www.mof.gov.sa/ar/docs/news/statement2008ar.pdf>) (for instance, there is an additional category ("other sectors") under the Arabic version for the heading "Appropriations"). For the purpose of this question, though, these slight differences in detail do not make the Arabic version qualitatively different than the English one.

IBP Comment: IBP editors chose answer "c" to maintain the consistency of the assumptions used in selecting answers across the countries.

See questions 63 and 61. Ministries usually do not have press staff or official speakers (there are a few exceptions, such as health and interior, but their speakers perform press work rather than tending to citizen inquiries. Information departments in state agencies usually limit themselves to printing general brochures about their organizations.

Peer Reviewer Two Comment: In the Arabic version of its website (<http://www.mof.gov.sa/ar/default.asp>), under the section "Projects & Contracts" (العقود والمشاريع), the Ministry of Finance provides highly disaggregated descriptions of numerous individual programs from the 2008 Budget. These descriptions are only available on the website's Arabic language version. For each project there are four attributes: the name of the project, a brief description of the project (for example, from a Ministry of Foreign Affairs project: "Purchase land and buildings to build offices for representatives abroad"), the geographical location of the project (in the previous example, "numerous locations") and the type of project (in the previous case, "building and purchase"). Since the enacted budget is not publicly available and there is no detailed information on expenditures, it is not clear what percentage of programs these projects represent. While the large number of projects comprised in this section could merit answer "a," the fact that the descriptions cannot be linked to expenditures would make "d" the best answer.

Section Three: The Budget Process

The Budget Process
Executive's Formulation of the Budget
66. How far in advance of the release of the budget is the day of its release known? <ul style="list-style-type: none"> a. The release date is set in permanent law. b. The executive announces the release date at least two months in advance. c. The executive announces the release date less than two months but more than two weeks in advance. d. The executive announces the release date two weeks or less before the release, or makes no announcement. e. Not applicable/other (please comment). Citation: Interviews with Saudi bankers and former senior Ministry of Finance functionary Comment: The budget statement (cf. question 60) is usually released in December, but the exact date is not announced in advance. A select few people, such as senior bankers, are apprised of the date a few days in advance. Researcher's Response to this Question was "d." Peer Reviewer One Comment: A more appropriate response to this question would be "e." The public usually knows that the release of the budget will take place during the second half of December of each year. The Ministry of Finance (MOF) has rarely deviated from this timing of the budget release in the past six years. This is the actual practice of the MOF. Peer Reviewer Two Comment: A more appropriate response to this question would be "a." Article 76 of Saudi Arabia's Basic Law states, "The budget shall be announced according to Royal Decree. It shall specify assessed amounts of revenue and expenditure one month ahead of the coming fiscal year. If the budget cannot be issued due to compelling reasons before the beginning of the new fiscal year, the budget of the previous year shall remain in force until the new budget can be issued." (http://www.saudiembassy.net/Country/Government/law%20of%20governance.asp) . Thus while a particular date is not specified, the equivalent of a "no later than" formulation set in permanent law would make "a" the most accurate response. In the past five years, the announcement of the budget has occurred within a relatively close range of dates: 12/10/2007, 12/18/2006, 12/13/2005, 12/08/2004, and 12/15/2003. IBP Comment: IBP editors chose answer "a" to maintain the consistency of the assumptions used in selecting answers across the countries.	a

There have been some demands from the Majlis to be granted budgetary powers, but its mid-term prospects to receive them are rated as rather dim, especially as the current oil boom has obviated the need to impose any taxes that might be politically contentious. Prince Bandar bin Sultan, former Saudi ambassador to the US. Saudi Arabia has not subscribed to WTO rules on government procurement. It is generally recognized that "big players" (i.e. princes and well-connected courtiers) play a role in many consortia applying for big tenders, but the government creates some level of competition by at least inviting bids that involve many different well-connected factions that hence have to compete among themselves on price and quality. There is very little international and no local reporting on this however. The answer is somewhere between c and d.

Researcher's Response to this Question was "d."

Peer Reviewer One Comment:

Peer Reviewer Two Comment: A more appropriate response to this question would be "c." The controversy surrounding the BAE scandal was largely based on the UK government's collusion with BAE Systems to block investigations into corrupt practices. Instances of corruption are usually not isolated, and on this same question, the UK scored a "b" on the 2005 version of this questionnaire. According to the US State Department's 2006 Report on Saudi Arabia's Investment Climate, "Foreign firms have identified corruption as an obstacle to investment in Saudi Arabia. Government procurement is an area often cited, as is de facto protection of businesses in which senior officials or elite individuals have a stake" (<http://www.state.gov/e/eeb/ifd/2006/62029.htm>). While the procurement process is not fully transparent in Saudi Arabia, answer "d" seems severe. The UNDP's Program on Governance in the Arab Region (POGAR), in its report on Fiscal Transparency in Saudi Arabia, notes, "Government procurements are governed by the Tenders Regulation and its Implementing Rules. The Regulation passed in June 2003 promises better publicity and greater transparency in the award of government contracts. Competitive bidding is required for procurements greater than SR 1 million ($267,000)" (<http://www.pogar.org/countries/finances.asp?cid=16>). For Transparency International's 2007 Corruption Perception Index, Saudi Arabia ranks 79th out of 179 countries (http://www.transparency.org/policy_research/surveys_indices/cpi/2007).

Comment:

They are never released to the public. The "closing accounts" as produces by the General Auditing Bureau ("diwan al-muraqaba al-'ama") usually take between two and four years to produce, and their circulation is strictly limited even within the government, in particular since the 1990/91 Gulf war. See also question 101.

Although the Saudi government has designated the General Auditing Bureau as a member of the United Nations International Organization for Supreme Audit Institutions (INTOSAI), suggesting that it is the country's external auditing body, in fact this body is not independent of the executive and its functions more closely resemble those of an internal audit body.

Peer Reviewer One Comment:

Peer Reviewer Two Comment: Answer "b" is correct. In addition to state revenues and expenditures, the GAB also audits private firms and companies in which the state contributes or guarantees a minimum profit or has a stake of at least 25%. Although companies or associations in whose capital the state contributes with other States, or other bodies or international bodies are excluded from the GAB's mandate, state representatives in such bodies provide the GAB with financial reports for these bodies. Thus, answer "b" seems more appropriate than answer "c." Comment:

There is a dedicated department within the general auditing bureau for military sector auditing. The General Auditing Bureau's leverage over security sector agencies is in fact very limited, however, as the latter are controlled by senior royals running the institutions as their personal fiefdoms. The Bureau might be used to investigate specific departments or procedures, but de facto only on the request of the senior princes in charge of the respective agency. Staffing levels hence are not the primary problem.

Researcher's Response to this Question was "b."

Peer Reviewer One Comment:

Peer Reviewer Two Comment: A more appropriate response to this question would be "a." There is no indication that staffing levels are insufficient. Because the answer to this question is to be based on staffing levels and not on whether or not in practice the SAI (GAB) actually conducts audits of the security sector, "a" is a more appropriate answer to this question.
