Highlights Information in Public Documents

Argentina's score on the Open Budget Index shows that the government provides the public with some information on the central government's budget and financial activities during the course of the budget year. This makes it difficult for citizens to hold government accountable for its management of the public's money.

The Open Budget Index 2008 evaluates the quantity and type of information that governments make available to their publics in the seven key budget documents that should be issued during the budget year. One of the most important documents is the executive's budget proposal. It should contain the executive's plans for the upcoming year along with the cost of the proposed activities. The proposal should be available to the public and to the legislature prior to being finalized, at least three months before the start of the budget year to allow for sufficient review and public debate.

In Argentina, the proposal provides substantial information to the public, meaning citizens have a comprehensive picture of the government's plans for taxing and spending for the upcoming year.

However, it is somewhat difficult to track spending, revenue collection and borrowing during the year. Although Argentina publishes its in-year reports, it does not publish a mid-year review. Publishing this document would greatly strengthen public accountability, since it would provide a more comprehensive update on how the budget is being implemented during the year.

It is also somewhat difficult to assess budget performance in Argentina once the budget year is over. A year-end report is produced, allowing comparisons between what was budgeted and what was actually spent and collected. However, while Argentina produces audit reports for some departments, the government does not make an annual audit report public and does not provide any information on whether the audit report's recommendations are successfully implemented.

Access to the highly detailed budget information needed to understand the government's progress in undertaking a specific project or activity remains limited. There is a presidential decree that guarantees public access to information, but it only applies to the National Executive Government. Furthermore, many offices of the Government excuse themselves under the law of "Procedimientos Administrativos," which pre-exists and contradicts the decree.

Public Participation and Institutions of Accountability

Beyond improving access to key budget documents, there are other ways in which Country's budget process could be made more open.

Opportunities for citizen participation in budget debates could be increased. For example, while the legislature holds public hearings on the budget, no testimony from the public is heard.

In addition, Argentina's Supreme Audit Institution faces some limitations in terms of deciding which audits to undertake.

Open Budget Index 2008

Argentina

The Open Budget Index evaluates the quantity and type of information available to the public in a country's budget documents. A country's placement within a performance category was determined by averaging the response to 91 questions on the Open Budget Questionnaire related to information contained in the eight key budget documents that all countries should make available to the public.

Research to complete the Open Budget Questionnaire was undertaken by:
