Highlights Information in Public Documents

Slovenia’s score on the Open Budget Index shows that the government provides the public with substantial information on the central government’s budget and financial activities during the course of the budget year. This gives citizens tools to hold government accountable for its management of the public’s money.

The Open Budget Index 2008 evaluates the quantity and type of information that governments make available to their publics in the seven key budget documents that should be issued during the budget year. One of the most important documents is the executive’s budget proposal. It should contain the executive’s plans for the upcoming year along with the cost of the proposed activities. The proposal should be available to the public and to the legislature prior to being finalized, at least three months before the start of the budget year to allow for sufficient review and public debate.

In Slovenia, while the proposal provides substantial information to the public, it lacks some important details, meaning citizens have a somewhat comprehensive picture of the government’s plans for taxing and spending for the upcoming year.

However, it is fairly easy to track spending, revenue collection and borrowing during the year. Slovenia publishes detailed in-year reports and a mid-year review. Publishing these documents helps to facilitate public accountability, since they provide updates on how the budget is being implemented during the year.

It is also fairly easy to assess budget performance in Slovenia once the budget year is over. A year-end report is produced, allowing comparisons between what was budgeted and what was actually spent and collected. Also, Slovenia makes its audit report public and regularly releases a report tracking actions taken by the executive to address audit recommendations.

Access to the highly detailed budget information needed to understand the government’s progress in undertaking a specific project or activity is fairly forthcoming. Slovenia has codified the right to access government information into law through the Public Information Act 2003, and citizens are generally able to enjoy this right in practice.

Public Participation and Institutions of Accountability

There are a number of opportunities for citizen participation in budget debates. For example, the legislature holds public hearings on the budget in which the public can participate.

Notably, Slovenia’s Supreme Audit Institution enjoys complete independence in determining its audit program. It also maintains formal mechanisms of communication with the public to receive complaints and suggestions

The Open Budget Index evaluates the quantity and type of information available to the public in a country's budget documents. A country's placement within a performance category was determined by averaging the response to 91 questions on the Open Budget Questionnaire related to information contained in the eight key budget documents that all countries should make available to the public.
